Hartman Grid- Nickel

2.13- Hartmann Grid

The Hartman Network is north-south radiation, apparently magnetic, and east-west radiation, perpendicular to the first and of electrical appearance. They are rectilinear radiation, so they cannot be caused by the different telluric influences, such as the composition of the soil or the presence in the subsoil of faults or underground water currents (which are always sinuous and furrow the earth's crust following a variable path), depending on the soil accidents.

They cover our planet with a network that marks square neutral zones, compartmentalizing the ground and rising in the atmosphere.
